Evidence Indicates Business Feels It Is Not Fully Represented

ECONOMIST BELIEVES CHANGE MAY DEVELOP

Points Out That If Representation Does Not Represent, Other Ways May Be Found

By E. PENDLETON HERRING, Department of Government, Harvard University

When broadly viewed, the lobby investigation going on in Washington, amounts to more than a mere crusade against covert interference in gov-ernment by assertive special interests. It has raised the question of whether representation by states and districts is sufficient to give business, big and little, the voice it needs and deserves in government.

Groups of widely scattered thousands, if not millions, of people now adays are linked more strongly by ties of common interest in a given industry, or occupation, than by residence in the same local set of territorial boundaries, and they are ask-ing to have their case presented in law making on that basis.

While the Senate committee may bring to light evidence of corruption and indirection, it also has unwittingly made vocal a criticism of the federal legislative machinery on the federal legislative machinery on the part of the investigated.

Inadequate Representation The testimony has elicited the important fact that business men do not have complete confidence in the ma chinery of Congress as adequately representative of They believe that Congress needs supplementing. They believe that noney spent for this purpose is well invested. There is ample evidence that the price is high, but there is general agreement that the need justifies the expenditure.

Tariff lobbyists are not alone in holding to this attitude. The presence in Washington of more than 500 lobby brganizations employing thousands of persons, and spending millions of dollars, shows the throng that adheres to the same point of view. On occasions, such as the framing of the present tariff bill, hundreds of other unofficial representatives hasten to the capital to present the views of their group to Congress.

As a result, there is to be found, superimposed upon the legal and contitutional system of representation an additional system of entirely spontaneous and extralegal development. This unofficial representative body in attempting to influence legis-lation has resorted to the methods which have been labeled as lobbying because that appears to be the only

PARIS-André Tardieu, the new Premier, won the first round in the debate in the French Chamber by his program of social reform and the emission of taxation.

This took the wind out of the sails of the Opposition, which will find it difficult to throw out a Government which has proposed such generous assistance to agriculture, industry and social reform.

At the same time M. Tardieu en-deavored to appease the Right by his declaration on foreign policy. The evacuation of the Rhineland, he said, would take place only subject to the strict carrying out of all the provi-sions attached to the Hague agreement, which means that as the plebiscite in Germany on the Young plan may postpone ratification by the German Parliament for several months, there may be a corresponding delay

n the withdrawal of French troops M. Tardieu added that the negotia concerning the Saar district the Germans want to regain which would also be handled cautiously, while the fortifications on the eastern frontier were to be completed as rapidly as possible. The lights of Locarno burnt dimly in M. Tardieu's speech, as his tone to Germany showed a slight hardening.

As for the naval conference, M. Tardieu promised to bear in mind the importance of safeguarding France's communications with Africa. This was, taken to mean that there is to be no weakening on the question of submarines or on the retention of a sufficient number of cruisers in the however, as the investigating com- Mediterranean to render the French mittee is learning. Important Task Awaits American Envoys to France and Italy

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU WASHINGTON - Although they will not attend the London Naval Conference, John Garrett, American Ambasador to Italy, and Walter Edge, Ambassador to France, are intrusted with important duties in connection with the naval limitations endeavor by President Hoover. They will help in clarifying the American position to the powers to which they are accredited, and thus, it is hoped, have a direct bearing upon the conference by facilitating a better understanding between the governments of five nations.

Mr. Edge expects to sail for Paris

early in December.

The two ambassadors are expected to be helpful in dealing with the Mediterranean problem, which, it is expected, will assume greater portance than the freedom of the seas question, which is said to have been excluded from consideration by the conference. The State Depart-Prospect of New Government is greatly interested in the Franco-Italian conversations and negotiations on this account, and is calling upon Ambassadors Garrett and Edge to assist in the endeavor to bring about an accord that will pave the way for a five-power pact at the London conference.

LONDON-Sixty nations are now spending annually a total of £890,-000,000 (about $4,450,000,000) on military and naval armaments, an amount greatly in excess of their combined outlay for the same purposes before the Great War. This fact accentuates the need of the Five-Power Naval Limitation Conference which, thanks to the Hoover-MacDonald conversations, is to begin here on Jan. 20. CHAIN STORES DEFEND POLICY IN CONFERENCE

Independent Grocers Claim to Be Greater Aid to General Prosperity

WASHINGTON-Whether the corner grocery store shall be a chain store or an independent and whether it shall receive its food products direct from the manufacturer or through the wholesaler were debated before the Associated Grocery Manufacturers of America by representatives of various types of distributors. The chain store was defended by R. W. Lyons, executive secretary of the National Chain Store Association, who declared that it benefits the con-sumer by saving him large sums wasted in distribution and the manufacturer by assuring him a stable market. The chain store expects a price from the food manufacturer that will give him benefits equivalent to the services he offers, Mr. Lyons said, but he denounced any inference that the chain stores employs unfair acts of competition.

Optimistic for the future of the independent retail grocer was Eugene S. Berthiaume, president of the National Association of Retail Grocers, who has been selling groceries for "Buying power does not make a clean, bright store, nor does it insure a stream of customers," he

The Independent Grocers' Alliance represented at the meeting by J. Frank Grimes, of Chicago, sees in the voluntary chain the panacea for the grocery industry. Annot hope to live to see it realized. with nearly 25,000 members stores in 35 states has found that the independent is just as intelligent and just as efficient as the chain store manager when he is given an equal opportunity, he said.

The wholesalers' part in grocery distribution was discussed by T. F. Branham, president, National Wholesale Grocers' Association and R. H. Rowe, secretary, American Wholesale Grocers' Association. The middleman in Mr. Branham's opinion performs a valuable service to the manufacturer and consumer by carrying reserve stock, assuming credit liabilities and furnishing informed advice on supply and demand. Mr. Rowe warned the manufacturers that too much concentration in one branch of the industry may subject all branches to government regulation.

"Selling to the retail trade direct would handicap the success of the entire plan," he declared. "Our activities will be directed toward the elimination of existing complications, in distribution, but we will not enter the field of marketing for any of our

Co-operative warehousing would be one of the most progressive steps undertaken in the distribution field, H. R. Drackett declared. Under the scheme details of which are being worked out, the co-operative ware-house not only would house merthe branch offices of all participating companies, he said.

"The effect of this concentration movement on wholesale grocers and chain store operators will be quite to division.

"No," Mr. Arnold said. "But we got the money; I'll have to check up as beneficial as on the producers,"

The housewife consumer had as of all the retail buyers in the United States, care little about concentration except as it touches their pocketbooks and their conveniences. The housewife, he said, remains loval to the manufacturer who provides quality, price and service. Since money once spent at the saloon is going to the corner grocery, he said, American women are insisting upon quality as never

"Big business" was seen as a permanent feature of the grocery in-dustry of the future by Charles Wesley Dunn, general counsel of the association. Chain systems and dealers' organizations are only a fore-taste of the future in his view.

He proposed an amendment to the Sherman Anti-Trust Act which would make legal "any business or trade act, the purpose of which shall be to promote constructive competition."

Political "Sense" Developed Mr. Baldwin went on: "Our Nation

as we know it now is a young nation by the side of India. In 1300 years we have been struggling to form a nation from many nationalities. It has been a hard fight. It has meant that our people have had to develop in the course of that struggle more political sense and they have been made by that struggle adaptable.

"In India customs and codes exist which have lasted for 3000 years and more with the natural results that we find there conservatism which we in this country cannot breed. From our struggles we are a politically minded people. In India they are not.
"This great political experiment embodied in the declaration of 1917 is one which our people have to consider at the very time that we are making a great political experiment of our own, when we are entering for the first time into complete democracy. It does not make our task any easier. No man can say yet whether we, with all that political strength behind us, are going to make a success of our democracy. Mr. Baldwin declared the Conservative Party, of which he is the head, "will not fail in sympathy or en-deavor to help in our time and to the uttermost extent of our ability to the solution of the greatest political problem that lies before us today."

the foundations." The speech answered suggestions in the press that the Opposition was using the Indian question as a means to party advantage in attacking the minority government. Its detachment created an impression which was reflected in the gravity of the tone of subsequent speakers. The debate was thus throughout upon a very high level except in some brief exchanges between David Lloyd George and Wedgwood Benn, Secretary of State for India, whom the Liberal leader chaffed as a "pocket Moses."

Building showed an increase of 3 per cent over the preceding month, though in this trade the level was below that of the previous year.
While the Federal Reserve Board is still keeping a careful check on developments in the stock market, the feeling is growing that the forced sale of marginal accounts has about run its course with the prospect of a period of moderate stability. Nei-ther the federal reserve system nor any member of the Treasury Depart-ment has made any direct comment on the developments in Wall Street. Unofficially, however, the formal statement of President Hoover, issued Oct. 26 at the White House in which he declared that business is sound and prosperous, is accepted as representing the verdict of financial reports brought to the capital.

It is accepted that the Federal Reserve machinery has saved the country from a possible financial panic by isolating the effect of the violent Fundamental conditions between 1907 and 1929 are entirely different, it is further pointed out. At that time there was an overexpansion of business in addition to a credit stringency and a surplus of goods which remained unsold or was dumped on the market. At the present time there are unfilled orders, rather than a surplys of goods.

Foreign trade means more to New the United States, Howard Coonley, former president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, who leads the delegation, told Congressmen Senators, representatives of the Federal Department of Commerce, at dinner at the Hotel Carlton.

"We are developing in New England to co-ordinate our present position with the step and stride of the nation's business, merchandising," said Mr. Coonley. "There is evidence of an awakened consciousness to our lack in this field. The national proving-ground for merchandising programs is finding more New England

First, a solid realization of the foreign trade opportunity before us-not that we would maintain that every manufacturer in New England should promptly try to spread his products corner of the globe, but rather that those who have an intelligent understanding of the real opportunity which exists should take steps toward its realization. Second, we must acquire the frame of mind under which export sales can be established and built up consistently and profitably. Of great assistance will be foreign travel on the part of our executives. Third, we must use the same ingenuity and perseverance Geneva conventions, and at the same which has marked our industrial life thus far. We must apply common ense to foreign merchandising even as we now apply it to our domestic ales to other sections of the country. "Finally, we must enter foreign Belgium.

Their capacity to keep everlastingly at it, study constantly, ship punctiliously, and, above all, enriching goodwill for British merchandise, holds the keynote of what must be the major policy for New England. If there is a rebirth of foreign trade promotion in New England, it must be tempered with the realization that only by constant application can we reach a position in foreign markets to which we are entitled by every measure of our six states."

"Why should there be any hesi-Club. "We, in New England, are aljust as certain of profitable accom-

The United States, while admirably situated to manufacture and export cheap articles, would be very unwise in sponsoring such a program. Our best policy is to make the best article possible, the one which will give greater and longer satisfaction to the user and then to show the retailer how to sell this better merchandise."

Beaches and Friendly Bays, Mountain Streams and Trails Allure Tourists

New England is undergoing an economic readjustment through which its industry is working toward a new epoch of progress. The factors and portents of this ge are discussed in six articles. of which the following is the fifth.

By CHARLES E. GRATKE

New England's newest industry is capitalizing one of the region's oldest assets. The "raw material" stretches from Byram Point, where Long Island Sound laps the southern tip of Con-necticut, to the St. Francis River on the northernmost edge of Maine. It requires no manufacturing process. It needs no distribution system. And yet it is yielding to the six northeastern states an annual income exceeded in only a few of the most highly developed industrial classi-

There are as yet no definite statistics to show the number of visitors who come to New England each year what their expenditures will total. But there are some fairly accurate "guesstimates"—estimates in which the guess is the major ingredientwhich indicate the magnitude of this

These place the value of the "tourist crop" at between $400,000,000 and $600,000,000 a year. The smaller is that of the more conservative business organizations while the larger one comes from the more sanguine chambers of commerce.

Between these two is the estimate of the New England Council, which sets the present income of the recreation industry at $500,000,000 a year. Half of this is derived, they say, from visitors to the region who come from all parts of the United States and many from foreign lands.

The remainder is that which is spent by residents of the district themselves—Vermont folk who pass their vacations in Maine; Maine folk who pass their vacations in Massachusetts, and those who take advan-tage of the recreation facilities at Approximately $50,000,000 will be expended on hard surface road building and maintenance this year, while an equivalent amount will be spent for betterments by the region's rail-roads. The road building program of the six states for 1929 will add 658 miles of new hard surface to the total of more than 23,000 miles of paved highways in the area's road network of more than 84,000 miles. The inclusion of recreation as one of New England's major industries is far more than a gesture. The various activities included in this classifica tion are taking the place of many lines which show a decreased number of employees compared with a few years ago.

There are no statistics to show the effect of this on a regional basis. But in individual communities where specific industrial lines are less ac tive, the total population is increasing and well employed. Observation shows that units of the recreation in dustry are providing the employment Garages, hotels, summer children's camps are only a few of the numerous activities.

Rise in Summer Population

It is roughly estimated that the influx of tourists raises the district's population as much as 30 per cent scope of the "industry." One of the more conservative statisticians estiwho know the charm of days cent of the motorists who visit New England plan to drive through all of the six states.

In order to have more definite in formation upon the value of the recreation activity, several surveys are being made to determine the assessed valuation of property used in this "industry." This will include property directly used for recreational purposes, such as the 500 summer camps in New England, the resort hotels and other facilities, together with the assessed value of summer homes owned by persons living outside of the State.

Spanish Airplane Industry Advances

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU

NEW YORK-"Broken Dishes," a son. comedy by Martin Flavin at the Ritz Theater, once more tells the familiar chives by Dr. Carlos M. Trelles, stage story of the revolt of a smalltown henpecked husband. Despite the foins in the chorus of laughter. The story itself is not well knit.

Often it marks time and gets going uncertainly again as if Mr. Flavin could not decide just what angle of his theme he would devote himself o. In some ways this play resembles an aged and eccentric automobile which only a man who loves it can keep going. Such a man is Donald resourceful comedian, who rides blithely along on the crest of the action when the play moves, and craftily keeps it in semblance of motion when it backfires and seems

Mr. Meek plays Mr. Bumpstead, husband of a shrew and father of their three daughters. For 30 years, we are asked to believe, Mrs. Bump-stead has nagged her husband. In and ut of season she barks at him her disappointment that she married a veakling and a failure instead of the grand young man named Chester whom she had loved, but who went away to the big city and became rich. We simply don't believe it, and the weakness of Mr. Flavin's plotting is revealed in the end, when to conclude his story he has to make Mrs. Bumpstead admit that the glories of Chester were largely invented by her as a means of expressing her disappointment that her husband has not got on. that makes one forget all its weaknesses. It presents a real character, a human being in the round, that monumentally kind little man, Cyrus Bumpstead. Entirely apart from the story he exists. He existed before the play began and he goes on tri-umphantly after it is over. Cyrus is the direct descendant of "my Uncle Toby," in "Tristram Shandy," who, having caught a fly, you remember, carefully opened the window and let it sail away unharmed, with his blessing.

Cyrus decides to help his younger daughter, Elaine, get married to a grocer's boy that she may escape the barrage of sour sniffs that Mrs. Bumpstead steadily lays down. He cheerfully undertakes to wash the supper dishes when Mrs. Bumpstead and the two elder daughters depart for an evening at the movies. First he goes to a lodge meeting, however, and comes home beaming with the spirit of Rotary. He keeps silent when a sheriff comes hunting for Chester the Glorious, who has happened along and is in hiding. Chester turns out to be a crooked oil promoter, a gold brick purveyor, an all-round rascal who has spent half his life in jail. "It would break Jenny's heart to find that out," Cyrus says, in explaining why he made no effort to get half of the $10,000 reward that would have been his if he had informed on

Mr. Meek makes a living figure of this colossal little man, this archtype of the well-intentioned and friendly Mr. Common People. And yet the character is so big in itself that this play will be the joy of all the stock companies of the land, for it has one of those homefolks stories that hit the neighbors right where they live. Bette Davis gave a sensitive perform-ance of the pretty Elaine, Eda Heinesmann did wonders with the equivocal rôle of Mrs. Bumpstead,

NEW YORK - It is possible that Victor Herbert's "The Fortune age and familiarity of his materials, Teller" is playing to larger receipts Mr. Flavin has by taking pains so in its present revival performances Havana describes the system of humanized and freshened the veteran at Jolson's Theater than it drew in tithes in the colony of "New Spain," tale that for the most part it breaks its original presentations 30 years tale that for the most part it breaks its original presentations, 30 years maintained in several other concerts down the natural resistance of an ago. Jolson's is larger than the musiaudience to old jokes, and everybody cal comedy theaters of that earlier day, and it is filled nightly. Evidently there is a large potential audience for melody, an audience that is surfeited with music that has rhythm as its dominant characterisheld to melody in his final operetta, "The Lady in Ermine."

How strong is the vote for melody, in the popular minority though it ing notes triumph in such a song as may be, is evident in the persistence Medtner's "Præludium," and then with which Victor Herbert's music one could not listen an evening through without hearing several of his compositions, one of which would almost certainly be from "The Fordeed, has for years been using "Gypsy this operetta, as the theme music of its presentations.

The present revival by the Jolson's Theater Musical Comedy Company is announced for this week and next out may be continued at some other theater in response to the emphatic welcome it is receiving. It is a faster paced performance than the original production, which had Alice Neilson or star. But that is entirely according to the theater-going mood of today, which is quick on the trigger when it comes to catching points. Richard Powell as Fresco is sharply effective because, added to a natural bent for comedy, he has the lightly swift and accurate feel of the humorous pulse of the audience.

Tessa Kosta, gifted as a singer and forceful as an actress, carried the hoydenish triple rôle of the ballet girl Irma, the gypsy's daughter, and the soldier Fedor with steadily sure effect, Charlotte Woodruff revealed a soprano of large range in color, and Charles E. Gallagher satisfied with the resonance and warm amplitude of his singing of "Gypsy Love Song" and other numbers of lasting popularity. Three Albertina Rasch dancers provided flashing interludes, and Roy Cropper held well to the romantic traditions of the soldierly hero of the story. The lines of the piece have been given a necessary and acceptable retouching.

For this is the poet's gift to mankind, this capacity to see all, as Blake wrote: "not with but through the eye"; to love all and perceive the inherent goodness and beauty in all; to purify our vision, to enlarge our outlook, to reveal the wonders of what we had otherwise perhaps passed by but carelessly; to show the relation of all and the unity of to awaken us to a keener realization that, while lovely as they are. It is well that Mantua, in memory of the great Mantuan, is to have its groves and gardens of remembrance; yet, even without these, he himself has left them to us, an imperishable heritage; for, as the poet Pascoli wrote years ago, in the assured light of imagination: "the sacred wood of Virgil is there where he was born, is there beside the waters where the Mincio broadly meanders and extends in placid curves, weaving the banks with tender reeds. It is there where he himself planted it, with nought save his own song."

Grandfather's House

I have been told that great-great-grandfather Was careful, when he split the cedar logs For roof and puncheon floor in his new house, To make them smooth and uniform in width, Such pride he had, he always chose the best. His nails were square: he fashioned them himself, And drove them home with mighty blows that woke The dim old forest into answering calls, And brought the Indian near with wondering.

In that log house of three low rooms was one Of vast utility. A kitchen where All things most used were kept. A big loom stood Against the wall with half a woven piece Of sheep's gray, or of blue, or maybe it Was goldenrod or butternut well dyed. There were two spinning wheels, the small one used For tow, or yet for finer linen thread For shirts and sheets, or its half part in linsey-Woolsey cloth for women's lightweight wear. The large one spun the carded bats of wool That lengthened into yarn for warm knit sock. And winter clothes made skillfully at home.

On one side was a table of white pine Untouched by paint, but scoured till the grain Stood out against the whiteness of the board. And there above that homemade table were Two shelves that rested on long wooden pins Well fastened into deep-bored auger holes Within the wall, and on those shelves were ranged Quaint pewter ware, a pitcher and a jug, And plates and cups and bowls that answered back The leaping firelight with a softened glow.

Above, in that low-raftered room there hung Choice corn for seed, with husks stripped back, And braided carefully. And there was mint, And catnip bunched, and sage, and thoroughwort. With thyme, and yellow dock, and burdock root, And garden seeds, all kinds in hand-sewed bags. And there was pumpkin dried for winter use, In rings cut round and round until the end, And apples strung and festooned with it all.

That kitchen held a fireplace so wide And cavernous that when the winter nights Came on, great-grandfather would take a good Crowbar and open wide the door, and while The snow came blowing through with icy blast, The log came rolling in with grandfather Behind, with his crowbar and steady ain Until he placed it where its hardwood flame Defied the raging night to enter in On either side the fireplace was a chair, And by those armchairs each there stood a stand, And on each stand a tallow dip in candle-Stick of brass, his Bible near at hand. And there they sat, their tasks all done. Grandmother knitting in her white frilled cap, And homespun dress, and checkered apron clean, And he, in linen shirt bleached white in suns, And suit made by his elder daughter's hands, The placid look on their dear faces warmed The hearts of neighbors dropping in to talk Of pioneering days, and Indian friends, And news by ship of mother lands afar, Or raised their quavering voices reverently In early hymns with meter long or short. Oh, simple joys! Have we today a recompense For this forgotten time?

Baby Afghans

TARMTH, beauty, and lightness are qualities possessed by baby afghans made by weaving colored worsted yarn through net. A medium-sized square mesh of curtain net is best adapted to the need. One and one-eighth yards of the material are required for cover of smaller proportions may be made just as effectively. Three balls of knitting worsted in a soft shade of baby pink or blue are needed when the afghan is made with a single strand of thread, and six balls when double threads are used.

Cut from the worsted strands 40 or 80 inches long, according to whether single or double yarn is to be used, and with a blunt needle having a large eye run the strands in and out of the net, entering each mesh. Care must be taken to make containers held perfumes. Soap in the ridge perfect by going in and out large and small size yellow cakes of the same mesh each row.

Trim the side edges of the worsted to even lengths for fringe and hem back the selvedge edges of the net. The ends are finished with a knotted fringe made by going in each mesh of the net with a single thread and tying a knot. The fringe should be of the same length at the ends and the sides.

The weaving may also be done in blocks of two or four squares which makes an unusual pattern, and two and white, yellow and white, or pink and blue may be used. The Afghan can also be finished by binding it, with a soft shade of satin or taffeta ribbon stitched in a harmonizing color. It is particularly interesting, then, that in the fabrication of Sudanette, a lustrous new cotton fabric, the approach was entirely different. William W. Hobbs, member of a third generation of New England cotton manufacturers, decided that what the cotton industry needed was not cheap production but very fine goods. They must have chic: and in texture and luster must compete with silk and the cotton is superior to these, notably, in the way it launders and the way it sheen, and suppleness, it might reasonably hope for popularity among well-dressed women and men, par-ticularly for sports costumes and ac-

HARVARD WILL PLAY MICHIGAN

Second Trip West for Crimson Team-Let-Down for Some Elevens

Although it has no bearing on the eastern football championship, there is no doubt but that the migration of a Harvard football team to Ann Arbor for a contest with University of Michigan is of considerable importance. Michigan is a representative of the "Big Ten," the big mid-western Conference, and never before has a Harvard gridiron aggregation played against a "Big Ten" opponent anywhere excepting in Cambridge or Boston.

Only once before, in fact, has the Crimson ever journeyed west beyond New York State, and on that memorable occasion Harvard played and defeated University of Oregon, 7 to 6, at the Tournament of Roses at Pasadena, Calif., Jan. 1, 1920. That game and this game in Michigan Saturday are this game in Michigan Saturday are only two times vast numbers alumni of that university have had an opportunity to view the Crimson team elsewhere than in strictly eastern territory, although it did go north to Montreal and Ottawa, Canada, in the montreal and Ottawa, Canada, in the early days.

The past record between the two teams is not much to go by, but in the four times that they have met, Harvard has won all the games and Michigan has not even scored. Of four games played to date, the first, in 1881, was at Boston and was won by the Crimson by one touchdown. The second was on Jarvis Field, Cambridge, in 1883 and Harvard won, 3 to 0. In 1895 Michigan came to Soldiers Field and Harvard triumphed, 4 to 0. The fourth game was played in the Harvard Stadium in 1914, when Harvard, captained by Charles E. Brickley '15, defeated Michigan, led by an all-America fullback, John F. Maultbetsch, 7 to 0.

Crimson Favored

This season finds the Crimson slightly favored because of a little better preseason record; but neither team has last years' team. Other New England season record; but neither team has shown anything to date that calls for particular notice. Both elevens, in fact, have fallen below early predictions. Harvard defeated Bates, 48 to 0, defeated New Hampshire, 35 to 0, tied the United States Military Academy, 20 to 20, lost to Dartmouth, 34 to 7, and defeated Florida, 14 to 0. Michigan defeated Mt. Light Assignments

The only all-victorious major east-ern teams, Cornell and Pittsburgh have rather light assignments for Saturday after rather hard ones the previous week. Cornell is to play Western Reserve which should be hardly more than a good workout, while Pittsburgh plays host to Washington and Jefferson, a team just good enough this year to require that the Panthers handle it with care. The Presidents have tied with care. The Presidents have tied both Carnegie Tech and Temple Uni-versity without a score being made in either contest.

Brown and Dartmouth get together at Providence in their last meeting for a few years with Dartmouth still somewhat shaken in confidence and Colgate, after thee intersectional games, plays Columbia at Bakers' Field Saturday in its first game with a big eastern football team. The Lions have been defeated by Dartmouth and Cornell, but are not to be judged lightly as an opponent for there is power to that eleven and then there is always that shifty sonbomore hack.

is power to that eleven and then there is always that shifty sophomore back. R. A. Hewitt, to carry the ball.

An important contest is scheduled in Boston between Fordham University and Boston College. The Boston team was outstanding last year and it has won five and tied one in games played this year, while Fordham has won four games and tied two, neither having been defeated. Fordham has been scored on only once, two weeks ago, when Davis & Elkins tied the Cavanaugh team, 6 to 6.

when Davis & Elkins tied the Cavanaugh team, 5 to 6.

A contest of real rivalry is due in the University of Pennsylvania-Pennsylvania State game with the university eleven having established the best record to date; but the record of Penn State is such that the game appears listed to be a genuine thriller. Another contest that should be productive of many thrills is the United States Naval Academy-Georgetown contest. The latter has lost only one game this season and added New York University to its list of victims last week. The sity to its list of victims last week. The Navy has a hard-charging eleven well grounded in fundamentals, but which seems to have been unable to catch up with the heavy schedule engaged.

Some Let Down

Some Let Down

Yale, Princeton and Syracuse have what might be termed a let down from their rather severe schedules of the past two weeks, but the first two mentioned will have to retain quite a degree of power for the Eli has often found Maryland a tartar, and last year the Eli were defeated by this team. Princeton has played Brown, Cornell, Navy and Chicago on successive Saturdays and is taking on a pretty fair team in Lehigh. Pennsylvania just defeated Lehigh, 10 to 7, two weeks ago and Lehigh has had a light game since. Syracuse is expected to have little more than a work out with Niagara.

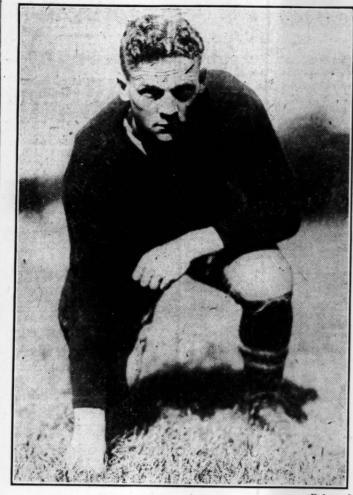

Niagara. Another intersectional contest finds Another intersectional contest finds that University of Georgia, the only team to defeat Yale this season, invading New York City for a game with New York University. The Georgians and N. Y. U. both have had worthy opponents to date and the outcome is a matter of speculation with the home team favored if any. Lafayette vs. Rutgers, Holy Cross vs Boston University and Bucknell vs Villanova take in practically all the remaining games of the larger eastern elevens.

The outstanding small college game

The outstanding small college game in New England will take the Tufts College eleven to Amherst, Amherst has lost only once this season and that has lost only once this season and that was to Princeton by a score of 7 to 0.

Tufts, too, has lost only one game and that to New Hampshire. New Hampshire, ranking with the leaders of New England, plays the Connecticut Aggies, a strong team but hardly the equal of the connection of the first time. Forward passes in the attacking zone figured in the scoring of two of the flying Frenchmen's goals.

Coach Farrell has a squad of only 12 men this season, none of whom are more than mediocre. Included in the list are only two lettermen from last year's squad and one of these may not make the team.

B. M. Aubrey '30 Best Man

Capt. C. B. Benson '30 and P. J. experience and neither of these harriers placed within the first 30 in the annual "Big Ten" run last fall.

Coach Farrell will be forced to depend on several new men. They lack President J. A. R. Quinn of the Boston Red Sox is not particularly enthusiastic about Florida as a training ground for his team. The diamonds and the weather are not as good there in the spring as they are farther west, he said. The only argument he has for not training in Texas last spring is that most of the major-league teams were so far away that exhibition games with them was impractical.

A northwestern baseball league, as proposed, would be a big attraction. Owners of the Pacific Coast League have such a league under consideration. Western Canada, while interested in basebal, has little opportunity to see it. It should go over big with the cities of Washington and Oregon, combining with the larger cities of British Columbia.

Home-run hitting soared to a peak last season. There were 65 times in the majors in 1929 when a player hit two home runs in one game. Wilson of the Cubs did it at times and Ruth of the Yankees, five. Klein of the Phillies and Bottomley of the Cardinals accomplished it four times seach.

White Sees Benefit in Market Decline

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU NEW YORK-The recent crash of the stock market did more good than harm, in the opinion of William Allen White, publisher, of Emporia, Kan. Speaking before members of the Rotary Club here, Mr. White declared that neither the business nor the financial structure of the country was adversely affected by the sensa-tional decline in stock prices, but to the contrary, both were benefited. "The decline greatly relieved the in production. As long as the ratio of employment remains high there

The acceleration of business in re-cent years, Mr. White said has placed it in the ascendancy over politics. In fact, it is business men, he declared, who are doing most to unify the world.

You'll spend lots of time on the Malolo's sun deck to Hawaii

the Malolo from San Francisco

She has brought the gay sports, the warm sunshine of Hawaii so close! On the Malolo, it's only four days from San Francisco to Honolulu. And that means you start your winter sun-tan at Waikiki hardly a week after you leave the chill days here.

Sooner than that, in fact, for the Malolo's capacious decks will lure you to spend most of your crossing in the balmy out-of-doors. Such broad decks, with room to tramp swingingly along or to sit in your chair undisturbed by traffic! There's an entire deck for sun-worshipers. Another is glass enclosed. Seven decks in all.

In every detail, the Malolo rates as one of the world's great liners. Elevators. Telephones. Roomy staterooms. Chefs-but that's a story in itself. No space here except to add: Ask any agency or Matson Line: New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Portland.

STOCKS HAVE MORE ORDERLY PRICE TREND

More Cheerful Tone Pervades Market—Early Gains Not All Maintained

COPYRIGHT 1929. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED. NEW YORK-With a sharp contraction on volume of trading the share market began to assume the role which most observers expect it to play for some time. The momentum of the rally late yesterday carried through to generally higher prices at the opening. After that seiling was sufficient to keep the market from getting anywhere, but not heavy enough to over-where, but not heavy enough to overcome the investment buying resistance to any appreciable extent.

The market seems to be in a position where extensive selling will come out mly on the rallies and where investnent buying halts when prices turn ipward. Meanwhile the narrower ange within which commitments are nade is reducing volume substantially.
The turnover in the first two hours vas less today than that of the first ialf hour of recent markets, and there vas a notable absence of large blocks rain nour or recent markets, and there was a notable absence of large blocks of stocks. Turnover for the full three-iour session was 3.214,000 shares. Bonds were active and firm.

Commodity markets were mixed. Wheat was weak in the early trading, but cotton opened with a rush. If strength in the latter were based on the bullish prognestications of the strength in the latter were based on he bullish prognostications of the Farm Board, it is puzzling that wheat also did not advance sharply.

Before noon the Government cotton crop estimate was published, giving an indicated crop of a little over 15,000,000 bales. The figures were somewhat smaller than expected, and had no great effect on the trading, but selling such as usually follows any bullish report appeared.

Credit Situation Favorable Credit Situation Favorable

Credit considerations continued to play a minor role in the readjustment process going on in the readjustment process going on in the security mar-kets. Call money held steadily at 6 per cent and other rates were un-changed. Nor did the weekly statement of the Federal Reserve Banks reveal of the Federal Reserve Banks reveal changes important enough to call for much comment. Total federal reserve credit declined by $11,000,000 and discounts increased only $19,500,000, that gain accounting for all the additional credit put out by the reserve.

It is of course evident that the large fraction reserves and the property of the service of t

It is of course evident that the large drafts on reserve credit are no longer necessary, now that brokers loans are down nearly $2,000,000,000 from the recent peak and that the trend is downward in loans, stock prices and commercial borrowing. The system's ratio of reserve is now 69.8 per cent, compared with 69.4 per cent a week ago and 67.1 per cent at this time last year.

a tendency toward weakness. London is losing some gold to France. This country also lost about $6,500,000 in gold to Paris last week, and there is some expectation of further exports.

Shock Well Withstood

This is an opportune time to point out some highly favorable aspects of the present situation. To begin with, the financial community is to be congratulated on the inherent soundness of its methods of conducting business, inasmuch as the most violent stock decline in history has not brought a single failure among the banks or the members of the New York Stock Exchange.

members of the New York Stock Exchange.

Although at times the facilities of the Stock Exchange have been badly strained, it has not been found necessary to suspend trading because of the stock decline. Nor has the banking group which supported the market resorted to price pegging. It has simply lent its aid to assist the markets in finding their own levels and in in finding their own levels and in establishing equilibrium.

No single thing is doing more to restablish confidence in the security markets and the financial soundness of Wall Street's institutions than the fact that a free and orderly market. Wall Street's institutions than the fact that a free and orderly market has been maintained, thereby providing ground for the natural play of economic forces. Not only has that helped to restore confidence in this country, but it must have had a profound influence on sentiment abroad. In fact, the reported heavy volume of foreign investment buying of of foreign investment buying of American securities in the New York market at this time shows clearly the foreign viewpoint.

Railroad Earnings

Another indication of moderately receding business activity may be found in the railroad earning report for September. For the first time in a good many months the net earnings of the Class 1 roads fell below that of the corresponding month of last year.

Gross revenues during the month were, however, 1.8 per cent higher than last year. An increase of 1.9 per cent in operating expenses brought a slight decline in net earnings. Car loadings during October were somewhat below a year ago, so that an what below a year ago, so that another decrease is likely to be shown in

However, net income for the first nine months was $140,000,000 higher than the like period of 1928, and the roads are virtually certain to finish one of their best earning years in history.

Brokers' Loans Drop

The decrease of $656,000,000 in brokers' loans was perhaps larger than expected by those who look to the movement of prices only as a guide. The wask covered by the report contained only 13 trading hours, and half of them hought rising prices.

only 13 trading hours, and half of them brought rising prices.

However, except for short covering, which does not affect loans one way or the other, the great bulk of the buying has been of an investment character, meaning outright payment for stock. Stock sold, on the other hand, has come from those holding on borrowed money.

come from those holding on borrowed money.

In all probability loans will continue to go down for a while, since investment buying bids fair to exceed margin purchases. With last week's reduction in loans, the total is brought down to the lowest figure in more than a year. This time the bulk of the reduction came in loans made by local banks, which had greatly expanded their loans in the previous week.

Before the close of trading next Monday the turnover on the Stock Exchange for the year will have exceeded 1,000,000,000 shares, assuming a moderately active market on the first day of next week. In no full year previous to this has the total turnover reached 1,000,000,000 shares.

The 3 per cent rentes were quoted at 79.90, and the 5 per cent loan at BRUSSELS (P)—After an urgent interview Thursday, between the Brussels Stock Exchange Commission and a bankers' group, a meeting was held this morning, with a view to extend all possible help to brokers who may be in difficulties, because of the market's break here in sympathy with the New York slump. Every effort is being made to support brokers. The local market situation was stated to be serious, but the bankers' intervention was expected to avoid a threatened collapse. SELECTED BASIC INDUSTRIES

AN INVESTOR whose funds are diversified in the fundamental industries of the world's wealthiest nation has a share in the nation's growth and prosperity. I Especially is this true when his investments are directed by an organization constantly in touch with the industries themselves. The large investments of Continental Shares bring its officers into close contact with the personnel and operations of those industries and companies in which it has chosen to place its funds.

NATIONAL CITY, CORN EXCHANGE MERGER HALTED

Stock Decline Alters Basis of the Negotiations for $2,250,000,000 Bank

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BUREAU NEW YORK—The proposed $2,-250,000,000 merger of the Corn Exchange Bank Trust Company with the National City Bank, which would ha e made of the latter the largest bank in the world, failed of ratification by the shareholders of National City at a meeting just held here, and the consolidation which met with the agreement of the directorates of the two institutions last September has been dropped.

The failure of the National City shareholders to place their stamp of approval on the merger proposal, while technically due to the absence of a favorable two-thirds majority, was in fact a decided rejection of the Coincidentally, the holders of 821/2 per cent of the Corn Exchange stock voted for the merger. Walter E. Frew, chairman of the board of the Corn Exchange, announced later, however, that as the consent of both groups of stockholders was neces-sary, the merger had been abandoned and negotiations would not be resumed Conditions which reversed the expected approval of the National City shareholders arose within the last-few days with the severe breaking of prices in the security markets. According to the merger agreement, the terms of the trade were four-fifths of a share of National City for one share of Corn Exchange, and to holders of Corn Exchange stock who did not care to trade, payment by Na-tional City of $360 a share for their holdings. Since the agreement, the figures of $500 a share for National City stock and $400 for Corn Exchange stock have been sharply reduced, until at one time Nov. 8 the former had sunk to $250 and the latter to $160, or $205 below the level of the cash offer made by National City.

These circumstances made it obvious that Corn Exchange shareholders would all demand cash for their holdings, facing National City with the prospect of paying for the 605,000 shares of Corn Exchange capital stock at the prevailing levels $217,800,000, or $121,000,000 more than the market value of all the shares at the low figure Nov. 8

BROKER BREAKS FAST TRADING RECORD ON

THE CHICAGO BOARD

CHICAGO - William J. Springer wheat broker for Bartlett-Frazier & Co., recently made a record for fast trading in the Pit, selling 4,000.000 bushels of May wheat in half a minute, within a range of quarter of a cent and reporting the sales inside of a minute

CHICAGO—Railroad requirements for steel, both for equipment and track material programs, continue heavy and will expand if pending inquiry eventuates, but demand frem other classes of users has declined sharply.

Automotive and parts interests in particular have restrained their buying, pending a clearer discernment of business following the housecleaning in Wall Street. This cautious dispositions are reporting the sales inside of a minute from the time the order was received and not only demonstrated the lightning rapidity of the broker who sold until after the transactions were closed, but also gave a graphic listration of the way the Board of Trade handled business at a time when on the stock exchange it was impossible to obtain reports on trades until hours after they had been made. The

BROKERS' LOAN DROP MAY MEAN LOWER REDISCOUNT RATE

Plate mills benefit from railroad car buying, but requirements of pipe welders have tapered. Bar and sheet orders usually are small and for prompt delivery. Strip mills are quiet because of slack automotive demand. Demand for structural material is fair. On all classes of finished steel immedeiate delivery can be made.

Prices on heavy finished steel seem stable at the new level of 2 cents, Chicago. Cold finished bars are off $2 a ton, to 2.20 cents, Chicago. Wide strip concessions are reported. Iron and steel scrap prices are off 25 cents to $1.50 a ton, the sharpest shake-out in more than a year.

Pig iron is unchanged at $20, Chicago furnace, with light buying. Merger of the Zenith, Federal, Toledo and Perry furnace at Erie, Pa., brings to-

STAGE NOW SET FOR BEAR STOCK MARKET. SAYS ROGER BABSON

NEW YORK-"Trade has been gradually falling off in many ways since the middle of the summer and it since the middle of the summer and it will continue to decline in several lines," Roger W. Babson stated, in reply to a message from Fairchild Publications asking for an opinion re-garding trade conditions and the stock market.

"The action of the stock market." "The action of the stock market." said Mr. Babson, "has been due to knowledge of insiders that this falling off has been in process.

"This is the reason why the Ford Motor Car Company, the Victor Radio Corporation and other large corporations are now cutting prices.
"Of course, the panicky condition of the stock market will come to an end as soon as the weak margin accounts are closed out, but the bull market is as soon as the weak margin accounts are closed out, but the bull market is over and for the next few months we should have a typical bear market with the usual ups and downs, but with each low beneath the previous low, that is, a tired, sagging market.

"Gradually, investment buying will develop, and the prices of good bonds and stocks which yield well will then begin to turn upward for a definite recovery."

For the Ducks

Sacramento, Calif. HE children at one of the Sacramento city schools are daily given an object lesson in thoughtfulness for the lesser creatures by a kindly man who appears on the school grounds during the noon recess. He carries with him a large paper shopping bag and as he walks about the children gladly deposit the remnants of their lunches in the bag.

Few words are spoken but the children all understand that their friend is collecting bread to feed a large flock of ducks which inhabit a pond some distance from the school. The ducks also seem to understand the ways of their friend and begin a very noisy greeting as he approaches with the offering. In this school about 29 nationalitles are represented, including Japanese, Chinese, Negroes, Armenians, Bulgarians, Bohemians, Mexicans, Spaniards, Koreans, Filipinos, Hawaiians, Russians, Slovaks and others "No, dear Mother—not one of them," he answered. "But I'm in a most particular hurry. Please make master understand."

Through this thoughtfulness the ducks have been fed almost every day for more than a year.

Freedom in Phrase and Fact

THE well-known political writer, "Pertinax," of the Echo de Paris, who is also Paris correspondent of the London Telegraph, publishes a story of certain lost opportunities of the MacDonald visit to Washington which, in the hackneyed phrase, is important, if true. It is fair to say, however, that this correspondent is recognized as a high authority on international affairs and that his sources of information are apt to be authoritative.

The assertion is made by Pertinax that Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald came to the United States prepared not merely to discuss the abandonment of the British naval bases at Halifax and Vancouver, but to give up, in return for certain concessions by the United States, the historic British doctrine of the right of search. He stood ready, so it is said, to accept the American theory of the freedom of the seas. But Mr. Mac-Donald was estopped from carrying into effect these projects, and announcing them in a communiqué which he had written, by the advice of the two Foreign Office functionaries who accompanied him, Sir Robert Vansittart, his personal secretary, and Leslie Craig, chief of the British Foreign Office in America. These officials urged that before committing himself the Prime Minister should consult the Cabinet in London, and further pointed out that the matter, especially the abandonment of the two naval bases, was of particular interest to the Premiers of certain Dominions. When, in response to this argument, Premier MacDonald cabled the outline of his plan to the Cabinet in London, Philip Snowden, Chancellor of the Exchequer, who was performing the functions of Prime Minister, is said to have responded that he would resign from the Cabinet before supporting the Mac-Donald policy. It is further asserted that the Canadian Premier sent vigorous protests to the British delegation in Washington.

The story is an interesting one, not without plausibility, although, in default of any knowledge as to the source of this journalist's information, it must be taken with very serious reservation. Were it literally true, it would indicate only that Ramsay MacDonald was a few years in advance of sentiment among his immediate advisers, and particularly among officials of the Foreign Office. Functionaries of the latter sort, whether they be installed at Westminster, the Quai d'Orsay or the United States State Department, too often seem inclined to take the reactionary view in any effort for the removal of causes of international irritation. The British naval base at Halifax, although its strength is somewhat overestimated in the public mind, is of no value against any nation save the United States. That at Esquimalt, neighboring to Vancouver, is not so distinctly a threat to the United States since it has its remote value in relation to naval operations in the trans-Pacific. And yet at a time when not merely the officials, but the people of the two nations are pointing with such gratification to the unfortified boundary between the United States and Canada, it would seem that there is a certain justification for the extension of this peaceful line by the abandonment of these two outposts of British armed power in the very dooryard of the American Republic.

The Administration at Washington is insistent upon the assertion that at no time during Mr. MacDonald's visit was the question of freedom of the seas discussed, and that it will not under any circumstances be touched upon in the London conference. Nevertheless, it lies at the very basis of any intelligent plan for the limitation of naval armaments. Moreover, any acceptance by the British Government of a plan for parity between its navy and that of the United States amounts to an abandonment of the ancient doctrine of the right of search. Only by the continuance of British sea power in overwhelming superiority to that of any other single nation can that command of the seas to which Britain has so long laid claim be maintained. It is perfectly certain that, under the naval conditions which there is every reason to believe are to be established as between the two English-speaking nations, Great Britain could not enforce, even if she so desired, the right of search against the United States. It is equally certain that whether or not the freedom of the seas be made the subject of discussion in the pending naval conference, it will in effect be established so far as these two nations are concerned by any agreement which maintains their two navies at a practically equal standard of

And so, since nations are very apt to cling with a sort of superstitious zeal to phrases when the facts to which the phrases apply no longer exist. it is undoubtedly just as well that this particular provocative issue should not be permitted to bring an additional subject of dissension mito the London conference.

Traffic Needs Wider Highways

CIMULTANEOUSLY with new warnings that automobile drivers must be more careful comes the United States Government and several automobile organizations urging more and wider highways as a way to reduce congestion, better protect people and save billions of dollars annually.

The Secretary of the Department of Commerce, in addressing a special committee appointed to study traffic conditions and recommend remedial measures, touched upon an interesting economic point when he estimated that the loss from traffic congestion was at least $2,000,000,000 a year, which about equals the amount expended for construction and maintenance of traffic facilities.

While carefulness is always necessary and commendable, the fast-growing traffic problem requires something more. Regulations-of which there are plenty-are imperative. Traffic policemen and traffic lights are essential for the protection of the driver as well as the pedestrian. But wider highways are even more necessary to assure greater safety and relief. The tremendous increase in the number of motorists calls for enlarged facilities as well as proper regulation. This is evidenced by the problem of cutting in and out of line. Recklessness in doing this is inexcusable. However, there are times when a long-distance motorist on an interurban highway who wants to get to his destination in reasonable time finds himself at the end of a long queue led by a road "mope" leisurely crawling along enjoying the scenery, or blocked by a fleet of trucks. It is almost impossible on the older highways, that have not kept pace with automobile production, for a driver to pass a dozen or more cars in close formation. He may slip around one or two at a time, but that immediately becomes cutting out and in, and may or may not be successful, legally or traffically speaking.

The obvious solution is wider highways, to which several organizations are directing their attention. Already the effectiveness of this remedy is found in the multi-lane traffic highway, where the lanes are clearly marked and properly used, permitting the jogger to jog and those desiring greater speed to be on their way. More adequate roads are being built, but at a road "mope's" pace.

The advocates of wider and marked highways are traveling in the right direction. What they need is speed.

Not All Are Millionaires

THE newspapers are headlining figures just made public which show that 290 Americans paid taxes last year on incomes in excess of $1,000,000. Almost ignored are accompanying data which prove that less than 2,500,-000 people in the United States had incomes large enough to require payment of the federal tax. This means that of the 120,000,000 fortunate beings whom Europeans are supposed to lump together as American millionaires, probably more than 110,000,000 are members of families which operate on annual revenues well below $5000. The tax report reinforces estimates advanced by the Secretary of Labor which indicate that 80 per cent of American families have only $750 to $2000 a year.

These figures may not be conclusive, but they do lend weight to arguments for a wider distribution of wealth. Growth of the millionaire class is not of itself an alarming danger. Even the eleven Americans with incomes of more than $5,000,000 a year must, of necessity, turn most of their flood of riches back into the channels of productive enterprise. But'growth of the $5000a-vear class is likely to seem much more necessary to all those below that level. Certainly in terms of social welfare and national stability the need for broader dissemination of wealth is clear. President Hoover has said that the United States is on the way to abolishing poverty. Yet in a vital sense poverty is relative. A millionaire with his mere $50,000 a year income may feel poor beside the billionaire.

Nothing feeds political unrest like economic inequality. And nowhere are extremes of wealth f place than in a de political equality is fundamental. In prosperity, when even the have-nots are beginning to have their mite, content stifles discontent. But when adversity pinches, the mite is measured beside the million, and even the wildest schemes for splitting up the million get a hearing. There is, therefore, all the more need to devise and use every sound economic method of diffusing wealth, not by giving people money, but by helping them to earn it. Profit-sharing plans and the wider ownership of stocks are doing something in this direction, but more rapid advance is needed.

Such advance is as essential economically as politically. The new school of economics is recognizing that wider distribution of wealth is good business because it means a wider market. For instance, the $5,000,000-a-year man may get along with only five motorcars; a thousand $5000-a-year men can use 1000 cars. Thus politics and business unite to illustrate again the utilitarian value of Bentham's humanitarian demand for "the greatest good of the greatest

Cities Beautiful of the Future

THE future, there is no doubt, occupies a much more honorable place in the realms of romance than either the past or the present. Even persons who deal with stern reality cannot always resist this lure of the unknown, though they are, naturally perhaps, reluctant to give in to it. It is not surprising, therefore, that a number of well-known English architects should have betrayed a certain reserve when recently approached by a London paper to give their opinion on the city of 100 years hence.

But for all their anxiety to keep within the bounds of the possible, the picture of the city of the future, which they conjured up, is not without its appeal to the infagination. It is entrancing to learn, for instance, that architects who have given proof of their capacity to erect beautiful buildings above ground should all apparently agree that one of the characteristic features of future large cities will be the multiplicity of roads below ground for vehicular and railway traffic.

Above all, it is extremely interesting, in view of the often-heard assertion that modern large cities are getting more and more similar to each other, that the English architects should be convinced that the great cities of the world are likely not only to retain, but actually to increase, their individuality. Thus, although the principal of one of London's architectural colleges maintains that all future cities will be built on stilts, with the shops on the rooftops joined to each other by bridges for pedestrians, there appears to be general consent that London will cleave to its horizontal tendency in buildings, while New York and American cities in general, as is reasonably clear, will continue their vertical sweep. There is, however, one other aspect of the city of the future, which, it appears, is extremely likely to distinguish it from the city, and particularly the industrial city, of the past and the present. It is that the ideal of the City Beautiful is more likely to be pursued than has been the case until now. It has, indeed, been apparent for some time that both in America and Europe a definite conscious striving is growing up to banish all traces of unsightliness that have, to a greater or lesser degree, characterized industrial cities during the last 100 years. Already great strides in this direction have been taken in a number of countries. Signs, indeed, are not wanting that in any future development of industrial centers of population the happiness that comes from the cultivation of beauty in every form will be given full play.

How "Privileged" Are Reporters?

THREE reporters on the staff of a Washington newspaper have received forty-five-day jail sentences for contempt of court. The reporters wrote, in the newspaper with which they are connected, that they had purchased whisky in forty-nine Washington speakeasies. Called before the grand jury to give evidence which might be used in closing these places, they refused to testify, pleading the privilege of their profession. A judge in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia refused to recognize that any such privilege existed, and the newspapermen went to jail.

All this raises some interesting questions for the entire journalistic profession. It has been the habit for newspaper writers to assume that they stood, in relation to the sources of their information, in much the same confidential position as a lawyer or a physician. Obviously, it would be much harder for the reporter to obtain information of certain sorts if there were not this commonly accepted understanding as to the abiding anonymity of its source.

But such an understanding, whatever its value, is a possible cause of much newspaper inaccuracy. It contributes to the tendency to print articles on the basis of unidentified authority. This is a prolific source of irresponsible journalism. In connection with prohibition, there has been a noticeable tendency to rush into print with statements of sensational character, relying on the theory of "reporter's privilege" to protect the writer and his newspaper from having to substantiate the charges made. A recent episode of this sort showed the "columnist" of a Philadelphia newspaper making sweeping charges as to the liquor served him in Kansas homes, and then being totally unable, when called upon by the authorities, to substantiate his defamatory articles.

If a newspaper gives publicity to the claim that its writers have discovered violations of the law, at specific times, in specific places, by specific people, why should that paper, or those writers, when approached in proper form by the public authorities believe that they are released from the responsibilities that would lie on other citizens who might make similar claims? Any newspaper and any newspaper writer making charges that concern the public welfare should expect to assume the full responsibility for those charges.

A Better Kind of Muzzling

DENEFITS of the new Hoover-Stimson policy O of refusing to promote—even inadvertently—the publicity efforts of foreign radicals, been quick to appear. First, the Administration decided to admit Count and Countess Karolyi without any more fuss. For several years this mild-mannered Socialist has received enormous publicity because he was barred from the United States. Now he can enter and is likely to be forgotten.

Later a handful of Hungarians gathered with banners before the Hungarian Legation in Washington denouncing the Fascist Horthy régime. In the old days the banners would have been smashed and the leaders jailed. They hoped the policy would still be pursued. That meant publicity, which, of course, was what they were after. They were eager martyrs. But alas, Henry L. Stimson is Secretary of State, and as such is charged with the duty of protecting the foreign embassies and legations that stud the capital. When the sixteen anti-Horthyites started their parade, his only representative was one rather puzzled policeman, who observed affairs from a discreet distance, apparently unwilling to believe that the legation was in grave danger.

Then a headquarters car arrived, and the paraders, who by this time are reported to have marched up and down the limited space of Sixteenth Street before the legation for exactly thirty-two minutes without rousing the slightest rippie, looked hopeful. But the car drove away again. "Hey, where are the cops?" demanded the disappointed demonstrators. Finally they admitted defeat and departed. The moral seems to be that a reasonable policy of latitude often prevents a molehill from becoming a mountain.

Editorial Notes

Peculiarly fitting seems the announcement that Lieut.-Commander E. H. Smith, iceberg specialist of the United States Coast Guard, is to make the north pole trip with the Graf Zeppelin next year. He has already studied in his ship patrol work the sources of icebergs and their courses south to the Atlantic steamer lanes. Now he will be able to study by air their relation to the north. How soon will it be before regular air patrol service is established to protect the arctic airplane traffic?

Our Co-operative Garage

UR garage has all the financial aspects of a mansion. I items had also included the building of a stairway to the For instance, there is a little debt hanging over it of $102,999.98. It costs $1000 a year to heat the place, and as much more for taxes. It was at our first annual meeting that we learned these inconsequential details. They are inconsequential because, up to then, and since, our active participation has been confined to writing a monthly check for $10.58. This includes a diminutive addition to the purchase money.

The chairman tapped on the table with his fountain pen, which squeaked at such usage, and announced: "We have stock represented here to the extent of 3404 shares, and proxies for 2765 shares, which makes 1000 shares more than a majority. Therefore we have a quorum, and the annual meeting of the Co-operative Garage Corporation will be in order.'

The board room is our co-operative building was about one-third filled. When the annual meeting of the big building comes next week, there will be standing room. only, they say, and that will be occupied by the men. The garage affairs do not attract so many, principally because the garage has fewer stockholders. Still it is a goodsized establishment, two broad stories of brick, attractive and spacious, with more than 100 stalls.

Copies of the annual financial report were passed out. Each was marked in advance with the name of the stockholder. We all fell to studying them. A neighbor to the right lifted an eyebrow as he pointed a finger to: "Operating deficit for the year, $100.40.

That did not seem to be much to bother about. But down the page came a more portentous item:

"No general taxes for the year have been paid, nor reserve created for them."

And then rose a restless feeling approaching consur-nation as the total of last year's budget was compared to this year's. That of 1928 was $10,250, of 1929 $14,250. "Won't you please tell us, Mr. Chairman," spoke up a brisk voice from the rear, "whether the additional $4000 means we have to meet that much extra this year, or whether it does not? And so relieve the terrible suspense. The chairman beamed. No, that increase was not what it seemed. It was an assessment for the retirement of bonds. It was in last year's budget the same as this, though it did not look it. So we all felt happy again. A co-operative garage owners' meeting can be a very cheerful event when things are going well. Even that $100.40 deficit was not what it purported to be, it soon became evident. The chairman recalled that there had been plans last year to levy a $10 assessment in order to pave the alley, to put in automatic door openers, etc. But subsequently the board decided it would try to get along without the assessment, and had spent more than $1000 on these various improvements.

Hence the slight deficit. The chairman genially hoped this would be absorbed in the year's income.

Oh, yes, and there had been some expense for gardening. What gardening has to do with a garage, one might well wonder, if he did not see the explanation out of his window every day. Our garage has a real roof garden. In fact, we should like to see any garage in town that can boast a trimmer garden plot on the four corners of its roof, with the center decorated for good measure with the largest garden of the lot and the fanciest trellis.

These co-operative gardens raise certain flowers. The sun is too hot and the plots too small, we hear, for vegetables. The gardens also raise weeds. It always is a job for a 100 per cent city person to pull weeds, and when one has to climb up a couple of flights of stairs and do his gardening on a blistering roof, nature's voice fades away. Several of the gardens don't seem to have been worked this year.

The chairman of our board beamed. He recalled, anent the deficit and the extra expenses of last year, that these gardens on the roof.

How we shall pay our taxes without the budget's provision for them was also explained. It was clear enough at the time, but is hazy now. But why bother about that?

If our directors are satisfied, we are We liked the looks of our board. We liked the looks of our fellow stockholders.

Garage government had not occurred to our' thought. hitherto. But that there was indeed a garage citizenship we found as the meeting ran along. A property of $180,000 does not run itself. Yet it seems to, for the most part. Apparently we owners pay the light and heat, out of our monthly checks, and turn the running of the garage over te a manager. He makes what he can through the running of it. Such fundamental details were taken for granted among the old-time citizens of this gasoline republic.

Discussion, however, brought out the general outlines of the state as well as its civic problems. The door trips didn't always trip. In bad weather they sometimes stuck. Who was responsible? The trip makers blamed the doors, and the doormakers blamed the trips.

Some of us, it also came out, drive in too fast. Who was to tell us not to? The manager was not in the best position to tell an owner what to do. The corporation had o take that duty upon itself, and evidently it did.

When driving out of the alley, some of us did not make a stop at the sidewalk, as the law requires. Also all of us do not patronize our own garage as much as we might. The management would like to have us trade with it if

And then arrived a class question which we newcomers had never suspected before—the gulf between a co-operative garage and a private garage. According to the bylaws we found that nobody but a co-operative apartment. tenant was supposed to have space in the garage. Carrying this out logically, we were told that if a friend drove over on a stormy day and you wanted to put his car up in the garage, you could accomplish it by the deft expedient of putting his ear in your stall and moving your own out to the nearest public garage.

1. 1 1 1 The debate on the privacy of a publicly owned garage and the publicity of one owned privately waxed long. Cars were being accommodated that did not belong and that at times interfered with owners' cars, it was declared. The restrictions on our enterprise were vigorously emphasized. Several other knotty points presented themselves. The chairman finally relieved everybody by saying that the board would take care of them. It did. It ultimately took over the management itself.

We grew impatient to vote. A lady moved we re-elect all of our old directors. That pleased us all.

But there appeared a hitch. A director rose something to the chairman. It then developed that we voted by buildings. Ours was not the only co-operative block tributary to the garage. Two other smaller cooperative apartments lay alongside. The procedure was to elect three of the directors from our building and two from the other pair.

We didn't know which directors were which, and blissfully didn't care. That may not be good co-operative citizenship. But after all, we all felt more or less like a little family, though to us new arrivals almost everybody was a stranger. To pick and choose when things were going well seemed like making a choice among uncles to carve the turkey.

Before the vote could be taken a very substantial look- , ing member of our motor community interrupted. We knew him for an early co-operative settler.

"Our board of directors," said he, "has at best a thankless task. They do the work and tackle the problems that arise, and we run along all year without having to bother about them. I move that we give them a rising vote of

Whereupon we all rose strenuously: J. K. V.

From the World's Great Capitals-Moscow

Moscow DMIRAL MARK L. BRISTOL, lately in command of the American fleet in Chinese waters, stopped for a few days in Moscow and Leningrad on his way from the Far East to America. The Admiral, who was accompanied by Mrs. Bristol, made it very clear in talks with American newspaper men here that his visit was of a purely private character and had no semblance of official significance. Due to the interruption of railroad communication between Russia and China, the Admiral entered the Soviet Union at Vladivostok and made a long trip over the Trans-Siberian railroad line from that Far Eastern port to Moscow. He declared that his trip was way comfortable and pleasant. While in Moscow Admiral Bristol and his wife visited the Kremlin and attended a performance of "Boris Godunoff" at the State Opera House; while in Leningrad they visited the famous art collection which is housed in the Hermitage.

1 1 1 An unusual opportunity to compare the functioning of the same orchestra with and without a conductor was youchsafed to the audience at a special concert recently given in the State Opera House. The orchestra was a powerful collection of 400 players, made up by fusing all the leading orchestras in Moscow. The first part of the program, consisting of the overtures to "Tannhauser," "Lohengrin," and "The Ride of the Valkyrie," was played under the baton of a conductor; the second part was given without a leader, but with Mr. Zeitlin, the organizer and leading figure in Moscow's leaderless orchestra, in the rôle of Concertmeister. An amateur's ear could detect little, if any, difference in the quality of the two performances; and the leaderless orchestra received especially warm applause for its effective rendition of the march from Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Le Coq d'Or," which was played with faultless harmony and precision.

The business year in the Soviet Union begins on October 1, and the Soviet newspapers on that date were filled with pæans of enthusiasm over the high tempo of industrial progress which is projected for 1929-1930. General industrial production is supposed to increase by more than 30 per cent during this period; and the forecasts of the five-year plan of industrial development, which were considered very ambitious when they were first adopted, will be left behind in every important branch of industry, if the predictions for 1929-1930 are carried out. Among the factors which, it is expected, will make it possible to increase production at such a rapid rate are the development of the "Socialist competition" between factories and groups of workers in the factories, and the introduction of the continuous working week, under which many mines and factories will work seven days a week instead of six. The Soviet "man in the street" will share the Communist enthusiasm over the national economic development mcre heartily when the rationing restrictions on many feod products are removed and when there is a more visible tendency for supply to catch up with demand in the provision of articles of broad consumption.

1 1 1 One of the fruits of new construction in Russia is the erection in Moscow of a new main post and telegraph office in the center of the city. The building is in the rathe austere practical style which characterizes most of the edifices in Russia that have been elected since the revolution. One of its features is a mechanical arrangement by which large figures indicating the precise time of day or night are displayed above the entrance, the figures shifting every minute.

1 1 1 The Soviet Government marked the occasion of the eightieth birthday of the famous Lepingrad physiologist, Prof. Ivan Payloff, by appropriating 100,000 rubles for the extension and improvement of the work of his experimental laboratory in Leningrad. This act was rather noteworthy, because Pavloff is the most fearless, open critic of Communist ideas and of the Soviet régime at liberty in Russia today, His thunderous denunciations of the introduction of a group of Communist members into the Academy of Sciences, and of the policy of favoring workers at the sion to the universities, have circulated by word of mouth throughout the country. Pavloff's international scientific reputation gives him an immunity comparable with that which Tolstoy enjoyed under the Tsarist régime; but no one who is acquainted with the octogenarian savant believes that the existence or nonexistence of this immunity would restrain his firm will to speak out his opinions regardless of consequences. The Soviet Commissar for Health, Dr. Semashko, writing about the significance of Pavloff's anniversary, took the line that, while Pavloff the individual might be a critic of Communist ideas, Pavloff the scientist, through his researches in the field of conditional reflexes, was working, even against his will, for the Marxist materialistic interpretation of human activity.

A new hundred million dollar project which, it is estimated, will be completed within six years, is the digging of a canal between the Rivers Don and Volga. This is an old idea in Russian history and was indeed first broached by Peter the Great; but the technical resources of his time were quite insufficient for its achievement. The main advantage of the canal lies in the fact that it will greatly cheapen the transportation of freight as between the huge river system represented by the Volga with its tributaries and the outside world. This freight must now be transshipped by rail at Stalingrad (formerly Tsaritsin) on the lower Volga. The length of the canal will be about sixty-seven miles. In order to realize its full effectiveness it will be necessary to enlarge the port of Rostov-on-the-Don and to carry out a good deal of dredging work in the bed of the Volga. German consulting experts recently visited Stalingrad in connection with the preparation of plans for the canal.
